Questions that may be discussed include:

- How does your school board celebrate student academic success?
- How is student academic success reported to your school board?
 - How are areas of improvement in student academics reported to your school board?
 - How often does your board receive these reports?
- What ways does your board and district measure student academic success?
 - What ways does your board and district measure student academic areas in need of improvement?
- What is your District's most important student academic metric (e.g. attendance, reading proficiency, college/career readiness, etc.)?
- What resources or training would benefit your school board's student academic success review?
- How is the Department of Education's literacy initiative deployed in your District?
- What do instructional staff think about adjusting curriculum to boost standardized test scores? Is teaching toward a test a bad thing?
- How will the likely transition away from Smarter Balance testing and to ACT testing with juniors impact your District?
